For the most part, the new features in Lightroom 5 are highly welcome. Even if you have the older release, you will find the new features are useful. However, the new version of the program is only available on single-user systems with Windows 7. I remember earlier versions of Lightroom requiring an OS to be 64-bit or later. Since they are Windows 8 apps now, you must be on Windows 7. It looks like Lightroom 5 is Windows 8 only, which is fair enough. We would like to see Lightroom versions of Windows 7 and Windows 8 available. Perhaps the most useful feature in Lightroom 5 is the new create-layer workflow. A new feature called bookmarks allows you to save your work at a location in your document. One of the big changes is that you can import photos with another type of saving (RAW, etc.) while using the lightroom interface. I've used this function for years, and it's definitely a great feature. To my knowledge, it has not been available in Elements or the prior Lightroom for Windows versions. Other new features are similar to those in Lightroom 4. In particular, the Library import and export feature has been made more robust. Lightroom 6 will supposedly be even more robust with its focus on AI. Another new feature that immediately attracted my attention is the new Exposure slider, modeling tools, new adjustment brush, and the new curves tool. If you move your cursor over any of these aspects of the interface, a little spot light will show up and highlight a part of the interface. Good for quick access. The highlight also appears to be changing color. To my understanding, this highlight aspect is just placebo magic and the feature will not be appearing in Lightroom 6.
